Red Sky in Morning by Paul Lynch | Book Grocer

It took me just under three years to write Red Sky in Morning. When I started writing the book, I had a full-time job and neighbours each side that were long-settled in the area. By the time the book was finished, I had lost my job, the newspaper I worked for had collapsed, and both of my neighbours had emigrated to America.

Daniel Woodrell, author of Winter's Bone and The Outlaw Album Paul Lynch takes a giant first step with his debut, Red Sky in Morning. It is classic storytelling, rough and haunted people and the times that made them, powerfully conjured, written in language that demands attention.

Red Sky in Morning by by Paul Lynch: Summary and reviews

The plot of Irish author Paul Lynch's first novel, "Red Sky in Morning," is starkly simple: Coll Coyle, a poor tenant farmer in 19th-century Ireland, kills the son of his landlord and is pursued by the landlord's men to the ends of the Earth. It all seems so familiar because Lynch rolls out Irish-novel stock figures who were hackneyed even...

'Red Sky in Morning,' by Paul Lynch - The Washington Post

Red Sky in Morning, by Paul Lynch. In a profile in The Irish Times, Lynch cites his primary literary influences as Cormac McCarthy, Saul Bellow, Vladimir Nabokov, and John Banville. I can hear Nabokov in Lynch's verbal gymnastics. McCarthy comes through, too, in Lynch's mix of rich language and ferocious violence.

Red Sky in Morning, by Paul Lynch | Fiction Writers Review

Paul Lynch has worked as a film critic, so it shouldn't be too surprising that his first novel seems to be inspired by cinema as much as by literature. Or that to describe Red Sky in Morning I ...

Red Sky in Morning, by Paul Lynch - The Irish Times

Paul Lynch's novel Red Sky in Morning tells a story of a man named Coll Coyle who is born in County Donegal, just north of Mary Cavanagh's home County Galway, and who in 1832 flees to America after accidentally killing his landlord's son. Coll's story is fiction, but the climactic sequence and other elements are based on fact.

Red Sky in Morning by Paul Lynch | Elly McDonald

Part I. Night sky was black and then there was blood, morning crack of light on the edge of the earth. The crimson spill sent the bright stars to fade, hills stepping out of shadow and clouds finding flesh. First rain of day from a soundless sky and music it made of the land.
