For a great introduction to game theory try "Games, Strategies, and Decision Making" by Harrington. It is the standard for learning game theory and great for applying it to everyday life (the right way). Ken Binmore is another game theorist/author that I highly recommend, even for beginners. Avoid "Rock, Paper, Scissors".

Rock beats Scissors, Paper beats Rock, and Scissors beats Paper. It's a game with (obviously) an enormous amount of luck to it, but human behavioral foibles and our poor ability to be truly random with our choices allow skilled players to do better than luck alone would predict. And as you might expect in a world where we are prepared to ...
